737-800 aircraft

Norwegian is proud to announce the launch of six domestic routes in Argentina allowing passengers to fly affordably from Buenos Aires across the country. Flights are available to book now from Buenos Aires to Córdoba, Mendoza, Iguazú, Bariloche, Neuquén and Salta with prices from just £49.70 one-way.

Initially commencing on the 16th October 2018 with two routes to Cordoba and Mendoza, with services to Iguazu and Neuquen starting on 19th November and Bariloche and Salta beginning on 3rd December.

Passengers travelling on Norwegian's route from London Gatwick to Buenos Aires Ezeiza International Airport can take advantage of the new flights departing from the city's domestic airport which is a short taxi or bus transfer away.

The airline's domestic routes in Argentina will be operated by a modern and efficient fleet of Boeing 737-800 aircraft. Passengers will experience the same level of award-winning service and comfort as Norwegian's European short haul operation.

Domestic flights to six cities across Argentina are available to book now, as there is a change of airport required tickets must be purchased separately from the London Gatwick to Buenos Aires flight. Passengers can easily take the opportunity to split their journey and spend time visiting the vibrant city of Buenos Aires before exploring other parts of Argentina.

Bjørn Kjos, Norwegian CEO, said: "The imminent start of our operations in Argentina confirms our long-term commitment to the region and represents a milestone in Norwegian's history. Our new flights will help to improve connectivity, will boost local tourism and increase investment across the country generating a positive impact to local communities. Customers arriving on our long haul service to Buenos Aires can now additionally travel across Argentina with confidence and ease thanks to our new domestic routes."
